

Do you feel like you're constantly under stress? Although 48% of Americans say they've taken steps in the past five years that could simplify their lives according to a survey conducted by U.S. News and World Report, most people's lives are not likely to spontaneously get less stressful in the near future unless they take appropriate action. As people proceed in an ever-changing world, life itself, at work and away from work, seems to be getting more stressful. A Time magazine feature on stress and anxiety titled The Evolution of Despair, discussed the views of evolutionary psychologists, specialists in a field suggesting that modern life itself is causing this stress that we all are experiencing. Human beings, the article observed, seem to be hard wired for a different way of life than offered by modernity. One researcher seeking to study depression in a remote pre-industrial society was stymied, he could find no evidence of the disorder. Archeological digs around the world show little or no evidence of child abuse, a phenomenon that many sociologists believe is escalating based on increased stressors people are experiencing.
